Baja California is the main Wine Route of Mexico, where most of the wine production is concentrated and also most of the wine houses in the country. Valle de Ojos Negros is one of the valleys with the best water supply, since it is located next to the Sierra de Juarez, where every year it rains and snows and all that water fills the aquifers of the Ojos Negros Valley, supplying its wells with water, which irrigates its fields and allows the cultivation of a great variety of vegetables, such as onions, tomatoes, chiles, grapes, watermelon, melon and other delicacies.

One of the most common uses of water is to irrigate pasture or fodder, which is used to feed the cattle, which are very numerous in the Ojos Negros Valley. Thus, thanks to the good presence of water wells, feed can be created for the cattle and this results in great production of dairy products, such as milk, butter, cottage cheese and various types of cheese.
